There is no place on earth like Mary Baldwin College, for 150 years one of the finest colleges in this country. This issue celebrates the College's distinctive architectural history. The center section is dedicated to those who have provided financial support in the past year, and throughout the magazine we celebrate the remarkable people who are the reason the College continues to be among the very best.

his is a tough climate for higher education, and our 150th year ushers in a time of challenges. On the one hand are continuing issues, and most of you know them: a small endowment relative to our competitors; low salaries relative to our competitors; dependence on tuition income, and thus enrollment in a time when demographics are not on our side. As tuitions increase, and they must, we require increasing amounts of student aid so that we are able to continue aggressive marketing.

But, given all that, this fall we have increased our enrollment of new students in the traditional college, the Adult Degree Program, and in the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted. In fact, we have the largest enrollment in our history, and our attrition rate was 86.3 percent during the past year. That, too, is the best in our history, and it is considerably better than many other colleges in this country. We continue to aim for even higher retention rates, however.

We have increased our endowment by 69.5 percent in the last six years, and we have raised almost $35 million in gifts and pledges — even if our endowment is still too small. We have increased salaries above the cost of living in the last five years — even if they're still short of our targets. Our reputation in Virginia and the nation has never been stronger, even as we struggle.

But, how do we steer our way through future potential uncertainties in the world around us? There are basically two options between which we can choose Mary Baldwin College's future course. We can enter a period of drawing back and reining in, or we can stay the current course, planning prudently to build on the foundation we have secured over the last years. As you know, standing still is not an option.

Uncertain futures make drawing back and reining in tempting, because we can control costs better than we can control external factors. That is what businesses often do — we all read the headlines. Many prestigious colleges have gone that route, too, and perhaps they can afford to do that. They may well have fat to trim. Mary Baldwin College does not. Drawing back means that we would have to curtail service, but that is not acceptable at this prestigious college.

The alternative is to stay the course, and that is precisely what we are doing at Mary Baldwin College. What does that mean? It means continuing the initiatives under way to keep this college strong and to make it even better. It means that we must challenge the future and not allow an inevitably unclear future to make us afraid.

It means maintaining momentum and the steady flow of creative energy that have been the means to our success for all these many years. Innovations such as the Adult Degree Program, Continuing Education, the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted, the Sena Center, and, soon, perhaps, a master's program diversify and strengthen us. New ideas in admissions, investment in computer technology, and enhancement of our physical plant make us attractive and, therefore, successful.

This time, difficult as it is, is not unique: Our history records other times of crisis. And we also see in our history the promise of renewal and continued growth that follows times of trial; thus, it is, truly, a time of celebration.

As we enter this 150th year, I ask you, then, to join those of us who serve the College here on its campus as we work together through this challenging time and celebrate the promise of this College's continued resilience and wealth of spirit.

I ask you, too, to continue — even increase — your support of Mary Baldwin College. In this way, we will not just stay the course. We will secure the future, as well.

was a remarkable 86.3%.

A Little Bit
At A Time

Every now and then when I'm traveling in the car, I run into road construction. You know how that is — long lines of traffic, detours, inconvenience — and it's always hot.

Lately, while I wait for the go-ahead signal from the person waving the orange flag, I've started watching the people at work. I think ahead to the day when I will drive on the result of their work. One day, instead of mountains of rock and dirt, dust and mud, and mess — just plain mess — there will be a new highway or one of those amazing interchanges that swoop cars up and over each other and other highways and city buildings. I marvel that a little bit at a time, a scoop of dirt here, a ton of gravel there, people are building a road.

The new design for the magazine has developed a little bit like road construction. It's been happening a little bit at a time, and, yes, sometimes we felt as if we had a mess. Now, though, we have the results.

To my colleagues Pat Kiblinger and Anne Holland, I extend special thanks for their diligence and hard work in preparing this issue. Pat, who came to Mary Baldwin just a year ago after eight years as Art Director for North Carolina Zoo, implemented the new design. Anne Holland '88, associate director of the Annual Fund, compiled and edited the entire center section.

And all of you who send suggestions have been a part of the project. Thanks for helping, and please keep your ideas coming.

Mark Atchison Is New VP for Advancement

Mark Atchison

Mark L. Atchison was appointed Vice President for Institutional Advancement, effective June 17. He had previously served as Vice President for University Advancement at Frostburg State University in Frostburg, Maryland.

Mr. Atchison was Director of Development at the State University of New York's Institute of Technology in Utica from 1984-1988. In addition, he has served as Executive Director of three organizations: the National Educational Institute for Economic Development in Washington, D.C.; the Southwest Regional Development Commission in Slayton, Minnesota; and Western South Dakota Community Action, Inc., in Rapid City.

Mr. Atchison received a B.S. in physical science and mathematics in 1969 from Kearney State College in Nebraska and a master's degree in public administration in 1978, from Syracuse University in New York, where he was a Bush Leadership Fellow. From 1965-68 he served in the U.S. Army Special Forces. He is a Vietnam veteran and a recipient of the Silver Star and Purple Heart.

He and his wife, Coleen, have three children: Melissa, 20; Bridget, 14, and Patrick, 10.

Enrollment Is Up For Seventh Straight Year

Mary Baldwin continues to buck the trend of declining enrollments suffered by many private colleges. College Registrar Dr. Lewis Askgaard reports that new students in the traditional program are up five percent over last year.

In addition, the Program for the Exceptionally Gifted and the Adult Degree Program have record-breaking enrollments this year. Total enrollment for the 1991-1992 academic year is expected to reach 1380, the largest student body in the College's 150-year history.

Church Grant Funds For Mediation Course

A grant from the Committee on Higher Education of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has provided start-up funding for a course in mediation. The eight-week course, which will become a part of the College's regular course listings, is designed to introduce participants to mediation and conflict resolution principles and skills.

The course will support work of the College's Mediation Center, established by Chaplain Patricia Hunt at the end of the 1990-1991 academic year. According to Chaplain Hunt, the aim of Mary Baldwin's Mediation Center is to help students learn to solve their own problems before they look to someone else for the solutions.

She said, "Successful mediation helps build a cooperative relationship between those in conflict. If it works, the disputants leave a mediation meeting with a reasonable working relationship."

Academic Spending Is Up Administrative Costs Down

An article in a recent issue of The Chronicle of Higher Education reported that in American colleges and universities non-teaching personnel — what some critics are calling "bureaucratic blubber" — increased 28 percent during the five-year period ending in 1990. During the same period, numbers of faculty increased only 8.6 percent.

At Mary Baldwin, the trend seems to be reversed. Over the past five years the percentage of total spending for non-teaching salaries, such as administrators, clerical, and service personnel, has declined. On the other hand, the percentage of the College's total salary budget spent for personnel costs for instruction has risen from 40 to 45 percent.

HILL TOP IS REDEDICATED

After a year-long period of restoration funded by Dallas alumnae Margaret Hunt Hill and Caroline Rose Hunt, Hill Top Residence Hall was rededicated on October 10. Mrs. Hill and Ms. Hunt, who are sisters, and MBC sophomore Heather Hill, who is Mrs. Hill's granddaughter, participated in the ribbon cutting ceremony. Heather's father, Albert Hill Jr. of Dallas, attended the ceremony, along with members of the Board of Trustees, faculty, staff, and students.

One of the primary aims of the restoration project was to create an energy-efficient structure, but the work on Hill Top also included installation of new electrical, plumbing, and heating systems, as well as a state-of-the-art security system.

Hill Top was built originally as a private home between 1816 and 1820, but throughout its history has been the site of educational endeavors: first as Mr. Easterbrook's school for young girls; then as Judge Thompson's law school; and then as a residence for students of August Female Seminary. Mary Julia Baldwin purchased Hill Top for the Seminary in 1872.

During the rededication ceremony, Laura Catching Alexander '71 displayed a miniature of Hill Top, which she built and furnished in celebration of the Sesquicentennial and in honor of her late father, Robert Catching.

Entertainment Season Celebrates Sesquicentennial

An exciting schedule of musical and theatre events is in full swing at the College. The Carl Broman Concerts feature return recitals by favorite artists from the past 10 seasons, including the Garth Newel Trio, the McDermott Trio, oboist Joseph Robinson, the Chestnut Brass Company, forte-pianist David Schrader, and the Baltimore Consort.

Other special musical performances include Broadway star Carol Taylor Edlich who was featured in a concert benefiting a scholarship fund for local students. Her performance was sponsored by the Staunton-Waynesboro-Augusta County Chapter of the MBC Alumnae Association. Duo-pianists Robert T. Allen and J. Riley Haws, both members of the music faculty presented a concert during the Founders' Day celebration in early October. The College also sponsored a free community performance of the popular Battery Dance Company in late October.

Mary Baldwin College's 1991-92 theatre season has a women's theme, opening in October with two one-act plays: "Sticky Revelations," written by Bette Allan Collins '61; and "A Voice of My Own," about outstanding women writers from the time of ancient Greece to the present. "The Anastasia File," a historical play about the mystery surrounding Anastasia, the daughter of the last Russian czar, ran November 20 - 24.

A visiting professor from Michigan State University, Dr. Terry Williams, will direct the musical "Quilters" during the spring semester. During the May Term theatre students will direct a series of one-act plays focusing on women.

The final event of the season occurs on May 21, 1992, with the premiere performance of Ruth, an oratorio for soloists, instrumental ensemble, and treble choir written by Frances Thompson McKay '69. The oratorio is based on the Book of Ruth from the Bible.

FOUNDERS' DAY 1991

The Sesquicentennial Celebration Begins

Growing from just a handful of young girls to an enrollment of over 1300 students, Mary Baldwin College has reached its 150th year. On Friday, October 4, Mary Baldwin's annual Founders' Day activities marked the start of a year-long series of events celebrating the College's sesquicentennial anniversary.

The sesquicentennial events began officially with Founders' Day convocation in the Student Activities Center. Featured speaker was Dr. Nancy F. Cott, Stanley Woodward Professor of American Studies and History at Yale University, and one of the nation's foremost authorities on women's history. Also during the convocation, this year's seniors, members of the Sesquicentennial Class of 1992, were invested with their black scholar's robes and mortarboards.

Mary Baldwin College's Founders' Day is celebrated annually on the Friday in October closest to the birthday of Mary Julia Baldwin, and this year happened to fall on her birthday. "Miss Julia," as she was called, was head of the school from 1863 until her death in 1897. A service commemorating Miss Baldwin's birthday was held on October 4 at her grave in Thornrose Cemetery in Staunton.

... With A Special, Glorious Day

Also honored at Founders' Day is Rufus W. Bailey, a minister and teacher from Maine who opened the school in 1842 as Augusta Female Seminary. Dr. Bailey, a graduate of Dartmouth College and Andover Theological Seminary, organized the school with the support of Presbyterian churches in Staunton and Augusta County.

Special guests for the 1991 Founders' Day Convocation were Mr. and Mrs. Edmund D. Campbell of Arlington, Virginia. Mr. Campbell is the great-grandson of Rufus Bailey. Mrs. Campbell, the former Elizabeth Pfohl, is the founder of Washington's WETA-TV and was the first Dean of Mary Baldwin College.

Following a picnic lunch on the lawn of the President's home, a panel of alumnae presented "Women Considered: Myths & Realities." The panel was moderated by Martha McMullan Aasen '51 of Westport, Connecticut. Martha is a retired United Nations liaison officer.

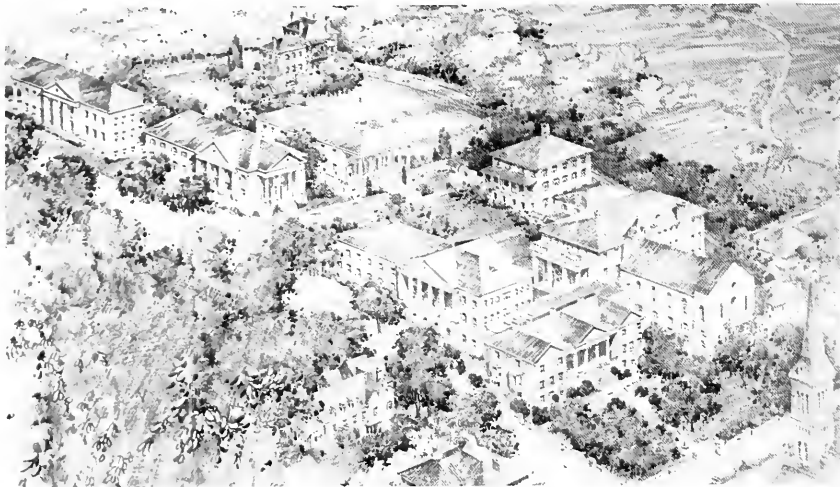

Panelists who represented various career fields were Charlotte Jackson Berry '51 of Columbia, South Carolina, national chair of volunteers for the Red Cross; Gwen Kennedy Neville '59 of Georgetown, Texas, professor of sociology at Southwestern University; Constance Elaine Atkins '72, an actress from West Palm Beach, Florida; banker Vickie Reynolds Akelman '76 of Barrington, Rhode Island; and Anabel Barber '81, a physician from New York, New York.

BY KATHY O'NEILL FRAZIER '78

When Rufus Bailey came to Staunton with the idea of opening a school for young ladies, he was greeted enthusiastically by the community, and in 1842 Augusta Female Seminary was established.

The land next to the old First Presbyterian Church on Frederick Street in Staunton was secured, and in 1844 construction of the building was completed. This building, today's Mary Baldwin College Administration Building, was designed in the then popular Greek Revival style. Dr. Bailey could hardly have envisioned how much his small school would grow over the next 150 years, nor could he have imagined that the first building he erected would set the architectural style for all the construction that was to follow.

The Greek Revival style, symbolizing the ideals of Greek democracy, had become the popular architectural style for the young republic as it broke prior ties to England. Through the years both the Greek and Roman classical styles have been used for nearly all of the new buildings on the Mary Baldwin campus. While there is variety among the architecture, there are common features such as brick, porticos with pediments and columns, and small-paned windows that help to give the campus a cohesive appearance, emphasized, of course, by the cream and white color scheme, consistently used for many years.

That the campus has remained stylistically consistent through its 150 years is rather amazing considering that architectural styles have varied dramatically within the same time period. At the time of the College's first major expansion under W. W. King in the early part of the twentieth century, the nationwide popularity of the ornate and exuberant styles of the Victorian era was waning and more serene neoclassical styles were once again gaining popularity. At this time the Carpenter Academic Building, Memorial Residence Hall, and Agnes McClung Hall (see 1914 Sanborn Insurance Map) were constructed in the neoclassical style, thus avoiding a major stylistic change.

The next major expansion which began in the 1960s included Lyda B. Hunt Dining Hall, Woodson and Spencer Residence Halls, Pearce Science Center, and Grafton Library. All of these buildings were constructed in a classical style during a time when buildings on many campuses were being constructed in the modern style, often without consideration for their historical setting or for architectural detail. The third and final major expansion, the Staunton Military Academy (SMA) buildings and grounds, involved less new construction and more adaptation of existing buildings most of which were also designed originally in classical styles. Moreover, the new student activities building currently under construction on the old SMA campus harkens back to the classical style first introduced by Rufus Bailey in 1844.

While the campus buildings relate to one another stylistically, the pattern of development has altered the character of the campus dramatically. Buildings have been constructed, demolished, remodeled, and added to the campus giving each generation of alumnae a slightly different memory of what the college was like when they were in school.

For instance, any alumnae who began attending Mary Baldwin College after the early 1960s may not realize just how much the layout of the lower campus has changed through the years. For instance, Market Street used to go straight up the hill next to the Carpenter Academic building, and the small campus had a north-south orientation from Hill Top Residence Hall down to the Administration Building rather than the expansive east-west orientation from Memorial to Spencer of the lower campus today. While the addition of the SMA campus in 1976 expanded the campus to 54 acres and over 40 buildings, it did not significantly alter the appearance of the original campus, but has perhaps had a greater impact on how some of the campus is used today.

It is hard to believe, at times, that it all began with a single building facing Frederick Street. In response to changing uses and expanding enrollment the Administration Building has undergone a number of alterations since it was originally built in 1844. The first change was the addition of the east and west wings that were added in 1853 in order to board students. Later in the nineteenth century, a conservatory was added to the front of the west wing that reportedly housed plants and birds. That addition was removed in 1915. Various buildings were constructed to the north side of the Administration Building and were connected by walkways and porches. By 1911, those buildings had been removed and the back gallery that is present today was constructed as part of a major building expansion in the early part of the twentieth century.

Campus Expansion under Mary Julia Baldwin

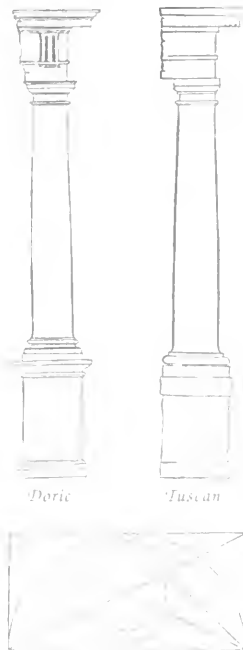

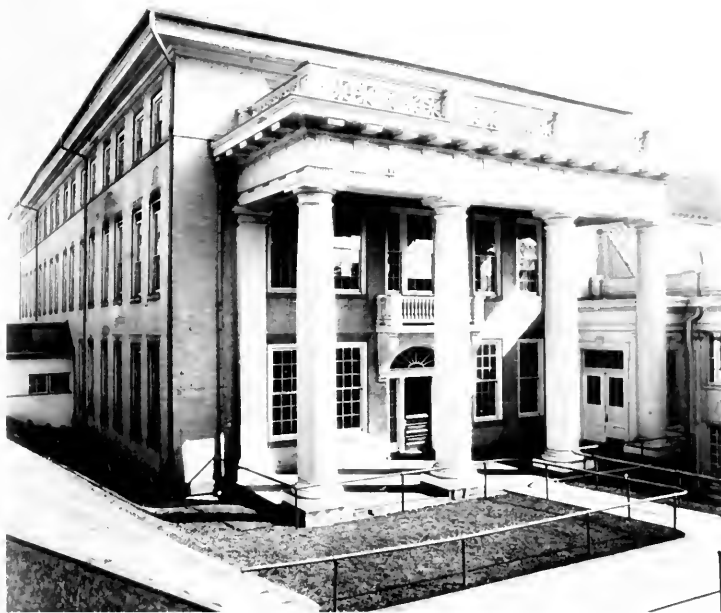

In 1869 Mary Julia Baldwin added Brick House to the campus, and in 1871 she initiated a trade with the First Presbyterian Church — she would give the church the land she owned across Frederick Street for the existing church building adjacent to the school. With the trade complete, Miss Baldwin went to work enlarging the church building to house the chapel, a dining facility, and classrooms. The Rev. Joseph Ruggles Wilson was a minister of the church and father of Woodrow Wilson, the 28th president of the nation. Woodrow Wilson was baptized in the church in 1857. Originally built in 1818 in the Classical Revival style, the church was remodeled under the direction of Miss Baldwin, in the Gothic style, popular in the 1870s. Known as the Waddell Chapel, it was slated for restoration during the campus expansion of the 1960s, but was demolished when architects found it to be structurally unstable.

At the same time the trade was made for the Waddell Chapel, Ms. Baldwin purchased Hill Top, an impressive Classical Revival residence located at the top of the hill. Built c. 1819, it is the oldest remaining building on campus. With the purchase of Hill Top, began the expansion of the College up the hill and the development of an interior courtyard area.

After the addition of Hill Top and the Chapel, the first phase of Sky High, a dormitory, was constructed as well as recitation rooms, Miss Strickler Hall, and a greenhouse (See 1899 Sanborn Insurance Map). All of these buildings needed to be connected, and sometime in the early 1880s, a covered walkway was added to the campus that became known as "The Covered Way."

The W.W. King Era

By the turn of the century, Mary Julia Baldwin had passed away leaving an expanded school with several new and remodeled buildings. However, these structures were rather randomly placed along the hillside and had little formal relationship to one another. Under the direction of the business manager, W. W. King, from 1897-1919 the campus was to change dramatically and the quality of the buildings to be significantly improved both in appearance and construction. Keeping with the classical style established by the Administration Building, these new buildings are an important part of today's campus.

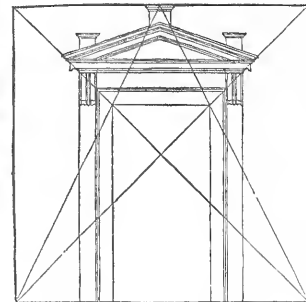

The first new building, constructed in 1900 and designed in the neoclassical style by local architect, T.J. Collins, was the Baldwin Memorial Dormitory. "Memorial appears to be the first new building introduced on campus since the original Administration Building that featured a two-story columned portico. It is apparent from the Sanborn insurance maps, that by 1900 Sky High had been greatly expanded to include more dormitory rooms and a gymnasium in the basement, but was still more residential in character and did not include an imposing classical portico.

Miss Strickler Hall, the recitation rooms, and greenhouse were removed, and in 1908 today's Carpenter Academic Building was constructed. Also designed by T. J. Collins, this building features a large two-story portico on the west end. Two years later, Brick House was expanded and renamed the Agnes McClung Hall. Its large east portico faced Academic. Monumental stairs once descended from McClung into a courtyard formed by McClung, Academic, and the Back Gallery and were the site of important college events. "The Covered Way" was improved during the period as well and connected most of the buildings. McClung, the Administration Building, the Chapel, and Academic were all better joined together by the addition of a new Back Gallery to the administration building in 1911.

With all of these improvements and the random buildings removed by 1912, the campus now was clearly organized around a north-south interior courtyard, and most of the major building facades facing the quadrangle had large, two-story classical porticos giving the campus a stately and respectable appearance.

The heart of the campus remained in this configuration until the early 1960s with only a few major additions. The King Building, a commemoration of Mary Baldwin College's centennial, was constructed in 1942 and housed a pool and gym. In 1951 the Student Activities Building (now Wenger Hall) was constructed. The Covered Way was expanded and joined to the new activities building. In 1956 the old King's Daughters' hospital was purchased and renovated by the college for dormitory space, now known as Bailey Residence Hall.

View of the demolition of The Covered Way.

Campus Expansion 1960-1976

By the late 1950s the college had purchased land from Market to Coalter streets and from Sycamore to Frederick Streets and was positioned for a major expansion of its facilities. In 1960 the Lynchburg architectural firm of Clark, Nexsen and Owen prepared a Campus Development Plan that included the following steps: removing "The Covered Way," Sky High, the infirmary, and the section of Market Street from Frederick to Sycamore Streets; restoring the Chapel to its original classical appearance; and adding a new dining hall, dormitory, library, heating plant and science building. Once again, the buildings were to feature the classical style prevalent in nearly all the structures on campus.

The first buildings to be completed were Lyda B. Hunt Dining Hall and Woodson Residential Hall. When these buildings were constructed,

"The Covered Way," Sky High, and the infirmary were removed, Market Street was closed and the new east-west orientation to the campus was begun.

Other more subtle changes were made that began to alter the way the campus was used. A new exterior entrance was made for Academic where "The Covered Way" was removed, and the monumental stairs to McClung were removed, changing the way these buildings had once been seen and used.

By 1963 Spencer Dormitory was complete, terminating the east end of the new campus with a sweeping circular portico. The Grafton Library was completed in 1968, and two years later the Pearce Science Center was constructed, finishing the expansion of the lower campus and establishing the plan that we see today.

ABOVE: An illustration of the Pannill Center, scheduled to open in 1992. It will be located on top of the hill overlooking the traditional campus. The Pannill Center will house the College bookstore, post office, and food concessions.

Campus Expansion Since 1976

The most recent college growth that took place when the old Staunton Military Academy campus (SMA) was purchased in 1976 expanded the area of the total campus to nearly 54 acres and relieved a feeling of being landlocked by the neighborhoods surrounding the College. Several of the SMA buildings were demolished and the rest were renovated for College use. Today a new student activities building is being constructed on the SMA site. The open space of the expanded campus is a pleasant contrast to the tightly ordered original campus and has provided land for expanded parking and new athletic facilities such as tennis courts, playing fields, a track, and a large Physical Activities Center.

The Mary Baldwin College campus today retains the traditional and classical appearance begun by Rufus Barley nearly 150 years ago.

Its more significant buildings, including the Administration Building, Hill Top, and several residences owned and used by the College, have been recognized for their architectural importance and are listed in the National Register of Historic Places. The careful blend of new buildings with the old has given the college a cohesiveness that can be appreciated by alumnae of all generations.

Kathy Frazier and her husband, Bill, are partners in Frazier Associates, a firm specializing in architecture and historic preservation. Kathy completed two years at Mary Baldwin and earned a Bachelor of Science in Architecture from The University of Virginia in 1978. The Fraziers live in Staunton and have two children: a four-year-old daughter and a two-month-old son.

FROM THE ALUMNAE PRESIDENT

Celebrating Success and Moving Ahead

While we've been planning for a celebration of the past, progress for the future has continued throughout the College and within our Alumnae Association.

A major change has occurred in the area of alumnae chapters. The Chapter Development Committee of the Alumnae Board of Directors is now the Alumnae Involvement Committee, the name change reflecting that group's efforts to plan activities for all geographical areas – whether that be organized chapters or regional or local special events.

The Alumnae Association has also expanded its awards program to recognize successful alumnae and acknowledge the role of the College in their lives. Since 1988, awards have been presented for Service to Church, Service to Community, Career Achievement, and Leadership, in addition to the prestigious Emily Smith Medallion. We have also begun recognizing an outstanding admissions volunteer each year.

So, as we celebrate past success, we look toward the future. We know that is what Mary Julia Baldwin did, and we know it works!

Fondly,

Nancy Wallace Henderson

by Crista Cabe

Nancy Wallace Henderson has felt the urge to write since she was a small girl. But it took a unique and difficult set of circumstances to make her realize that writing could be a way of life. Now she is a full-time writer of plays and novels. She divides her time between New York City and Chapel Hill, North Carolina, where she shares a house with her son and his wife, who are also full-time writers.

Nancy Henderson has earned success as a writer through dedication and hard work, in addition to talent, but she did not originally set out to be a writer. At Mary Baldwin, she was president of her senior class, chairman of the debating council, honor student, athlete and musician; she explored and excelled in just about every facet of college life. After graduating with a degree in English, she earned a master's degree in education and social work at Columbia University, and was a social worker in New York. She then married William Henderson.

Her life changed course when William was killed in an accident in Alaska while in the service during World War II. At the time, Nancy was living in North Carolina with her young son. With gas being rationed and the war still on, Nancy figured it was time to look for something to do at home. She took a correspondence course in writing and became serious about it as a career. She went on to earn a second master's degree, this time in dramatic arts, from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Since then she has considered herself primarily a playwright.

One of her plays, Lo, the Angel, has won three competitions, and another was published by Samuel French, Inc. She also has two collections of plays for children to her credit, and the summer of 1990 saw the publication of her historical drama, The Twelfth Lan- tern, commissioned by the Orange County Constitutional Bicentennial Committee for performance in 1988.

Nancy's most recent dramatic success, The Highest Prize, was originally called Penelope—a play about the long-suffering wife of Odysseus. Nancy wrote the first version while a graduate student at UNC. Several groups have performed readings of the play over the years, and in 1987 a producer interested in adaptations of the classics offered her a contract. That inspired her to rewrite and rename the play.

The Highest Prize opened last June at the Alma Schapiro Center for Theater and Music at Columbia University in New York. A light-hearted comedy based on the story of Odysseus and Penelope, it is her ninth play to be produced. The New York audiences responded enthusiastically to the play. As a special welcome to Mary Baldwin alumnae in the New York area, the performance on June 20 was designated Mary Baldwin Night.

At 75, Nancy does not rest on her laurels. These days she is spending her time working on a science fiction novel for young adults. It is the story of a 14-year-old girl whose father has been killed in a spacecraft accident, and who wants to visit a colony on the moon with her school class. "I'd say it is a little more than just entertainment," Nancy says in a typically modest and understated way. "It has a lot in it about how the girl feels about herself and her father."

Nancy's eyes shine with curiosity and intelligence from her picture in the 1936 Bluestocking, and they shine just as brightly now. Looking at her, it is easy to imagine that she will continue with her life's work for a long time yet.

PARENTS COUNCIL

The active network between the College and parents of students is guided by the important work of the Parents Council. These parents of current and former students involve themselves in such activities as career development, communications, fund raising and student recruitment. Our deepest gratitude to these devoted parents, for both their time and their commitment to Mary Baldwin College.

Thank you also for your contributions totaling $13,130 to the 1990-1991 Annual Fund.

ADP PROFILE

"Mary Baldwin College reawakened my interest in academic learning," says Zakira Beasley, the 1991 Outstanding Adult Degree Program Graduate. "The faculty and support staff of MBC respect you as an adult learner. They respect the fact that you can learn while you work and that life experiences are in fact learning experiences... They realize you have to raise the kids, work late at your job, and maintain a relationship with your spouse. They respect you in all your endeavors."

I have an opportunity to express the pros and cons of each side to everyone involved in the Child Care Scholarship Program."

So, where does a professional with 20 years of public service and a not-so-great track record with traditional education get a college degree?

Zakira explains, "Well, I knew I needed a program that would allow me to work full time, study at night, yet offer the flexibility to care for my family, and eat, and sleep...you see how complicated it can be for adult students?"

She adds, "Mary Baldwin College is extremely flexible, and that's why they are so successful in the field of adult education. I was so honored to receive the Outstanding ADP Graduate Award, but I don't feel unique. I saw so many other ADP students in the same situation that I was in...they have families, jobs, elderly parents to care for, but they also want their degrees. Mary Baldwin respects them and that shows in the diverse ways they allow you to learn.

"I took advantage of the advance placement tests, on-campus and community college classes, and independent study. It was the diversity of the program that allowed me to achieve my goals, and the ADP staff respected all these learning styles equally."

A true product of MBC and believer in its mission of life-long learning, Zakira is eager to take new classes, or as she says, "embark on new learning experiences."

"I would like to take a course in hand drumming," she says. "I have already studied African hand drumming and would like to study Mid-Eastern drumming and get my own drum. I would also like to take some creative writing courses...I enjoyed doing my homework with my son! When I was in the ADP program we would study together at the kitchen table, like pals. That's something I really miss."

Zakira meditates regularly and explains the exercise for herself as not so much a religious one, but a spiritual exercise. "We all have a contribution to make to this world and we must be spiritually ready to meet challenges and overcome them," states Zakira.

Zakira does seem to have the inner discipline to successfully accomplish her goals. With a job, and the responsibilities of a wife and mother, Zakira completed her degree at MBC within two years. She still works for the Child Care Program and has recently accepted a position as administration director of Republic Research in Charlottesville. Yet, Zakira still found time to speak at MBC's spring orientation for new ADP students.

"I was honored to speak to the incoming adult degree students," she says. "They are lucky they chose MBC, because the program embraces individual learning styles and needs. I'm sure many of these ADP students will be reawakened to academic learning just as I was."

Zakira Beasley Outstanding ADP Graduate of 1991

by D. Michelle Hite

Zakira, who was raised in Portland, Oregon, tried the traditional educational route, attending Occidental College straight out of high school. "I was just not ready for the four-year program at that point in my life," she says. "In 1989 though, after 20 years in the professional work force, I decided that I wanted to get my degree."

Those 20 years were successful years indeed. In 1976, while living in Sante Fe, New Mexico, Zakira founded and directed Open Hands, Inc., an agency which provided home care to elderly community members. She has since assisted in founding a second Open Hands in the Charlottesville, Virginia area, and has served on its Board of Directors. She has also worked five years for the Charlottesville Community Services Board as both an office manager and a housing administrator.

Currently Zakira is coordinator of the United Way Child Care Scholarship Program in Charlottesville. Through this program she assists low income working families with child care. A couple of lines, modestly tucked away in the bottom of her resumé, state that Zakira increased funding for this program by 60 percent in the last two years. She has also established a child care program for high school-age parents through the auspices of the Child Care Scholarship Program.

"I really like working with this program," says Zakira. "I believe our program is successful because the same person who works with clients is the person making presentations for funding.

"I am the person in personal contact with clients by taking and reviewing their applications, and I am also the person who gives presentations for funding, writes proposals, and asks companies for financial aid....I believe that I am in tune with both the donating community and the recipients of aid.

THE VALUE OF PROGRAMS for INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS

by Ashton D. Trice and Shirley Y. Rawley

"Thank you so much for taking care of us. We never forget your kindness, and we do respect that you have a strong sense of responsibility to control us warmly."
Excerpt from a letter written by a summer program student now in a Boston college.

"I hope to study my major as soon as possible; however, I have not gotten used to the new environment yet, so I miss you and MBC."
In a letter from a student now in college in Kansas.

For a number of years, Mary Baldwin College has attracted international students. Some study on campus for just a year, while others become fully integrated into the broad range of campus experiences and complete their degrees here. In addition, the College offers two summer programs for Japanese students, one of which involves a month-long stay on campus for students from Doshisha Women's College. The other program is designed for students who will study in American colleges and universities, several of them at Mary Baldwin. This program is seven weeks of intensive preparatory work during which participants study English language, are introduced to five college courses, and, most importantly, are immersed in American college life and culture.

After work on campus, the next stage of involvement for students in both summer programs is a homestay period. Some students visit families in places as far-flung as Wyoming, Boston, or New York, but most stay in Staunton, Richmond, or Roanoke. Upon completion of the homestay, the Doshisha students return to Japan and the other students move out across the United States to enroll in different colleges and universities.

Understanding the value of the programs to international students and to the college community in which they visit requires answers to parallel questions: Why do these young people come to the United States to study, and what is the impact on members of the college community who work closely with international students?

WHY DO STUDENTS COME TO THE UNITED STATES?

Historically the most common reason international students come to the United States is to develop English language skills. Students planning careers in English language teaching, in foreign service, or in businesses which deal extensively with American companies need to become comfortable with idiomatic conversational language and to be skillful in the technical language of their field. In a survey conducted this summer by a Mary Baldwin staff member, half of the 71 Japanese students on campus listed development of English language skills as the primary reason they came to America to study.

For international students, the American university system also offers expanded opportunities in other areas; thus, today's international student population also includes a new breed who comes for the formal programs that do not exist in great numbers or are nonexistent in their country. Among the Japanese students this past summer were a significant number who indicated no special interest in English language, but who wanted to study art, business, media communications, counseling, and women's studies.

WHAT CAN AMERICAN TEACHERS GAIN FROM WORKING WITH INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS?

Every member of the 1991 teaching staff of one of the summer programs expressed appreciation for the dedication, determination, and politeness of the international students. Discussions with faculty during the teaching sessions also reveal the challenges of teaching familiar topics to students who do not have the same language or the same cultural or knowledge base.

To teach international students requires a reexamination of teaching habits and is a lesson in communication strategies. Clarity of purpose and delivery coupled with the desire to reach students who stand on the fringes of effective language consumption are necessary for successful teaching in international programs. And in a college like Mary Baldwin, which emphasizes individual attention to all students, the practice of accommodating a different type of student holds obvious value.

Teachers of international students also gain considerable insight into the values of other cultures. One of the more telling examples of this occurred this summer as one of the counselors watched delighted students celebrate the arrival of a package of food from Japan. The students, as was customary, were eating out of the same bowl with the same set of chopsticks.

The counselor, with what he thought was great tact and cultural sensitivity, mentioned that Americans, because of concern about communicable diseases, usually did not share dishes and eating utensils. He suggested that the Americans students, with whom they would soon live and share meals, might think their behavior disturbing.

The student in whose room the party was taking place looked at the counselor and said, "I understand. You are offended by our behavior like I am offended that you are wearing your shoes in my room."

People who work with international students may come away from that experience with a profoundly changed view of their own culture. It is particularly interesting to examine local customs and institutions from the fresh eye of the international student. In fact, simply answering all the "why" questions of these students can be an education in American culture. For example, why do Americans have beauty contests for babies? Why do American students go to parties every weekend? Why do Americans say "yes" when they really mean "maybe"? Why do Americans tolerate so much crime?

For those who teach international students, their presence enriches our lives as it forces introspection. They make us evaluate our teaching techniques and give greater consideration to the frame of reference of those to whom we wish to transfer knowledge. For those of us who teach at a college like Mary Baldwin with its emphasis on individual attention to students, the practice is invaluable. And as these students question us with innocent curiosity and respect about our customs and values, they make us realize that we live in a global community that is not entirely American.

"Meeting various people who have various thoughts, opportunity to work hard in a theatre, getting a tough spirit." A student's responses on a questionnaire being used to help determine reasons for studying in the United States.

"In attempting to explain language usage to the students, I was confounded by the sloppiness of my own language habits." From a 1991 staff member.

"In economics class the teacher is very kind to us, because he always writes about the contents of his speech on the blackboard before he starts the lecture." Excerpt from a letter from a student now in a West Virginia college.

"One of the main challenges for me in teaching Japanese students is that I do not have a very good developmental gauge for them. I cannot look at them and tell their age, and I am constantly talking to them as if they were fifth graders. I had to keep reminding myself that I was talking to a group of very sophisticated adults." From a 1991 Staff member

"My classes started from last Monday. Though my classes are hard, I will try. I had a good time at Mary Baldwin College. I would like to see you there again." Excerpt from a letter written by a student now in college in Missouri.

Ms. Rawley is associate professor of communications at Mary Baldwin and was director of the 1991 Sakae Institute; Dr. Trice is assistant professor of psychology and was a tutor in the same program. In addition to programs for Japanese students, the Office of Special Programs is developing cultural immersion programs for students from other countries, particularly in South America. These students will have the opportunity to study on the Mary Baldwin campus during winter months their schools are on holiday.

B u i l d i n g AN Endowment

by Charles S. Luck III

This College, now celebrating its 150th year, has been built on the wisdom and vitality of the likes of Rufus Bailey and Mary Julia Baldwin. Yet, while we celebrate these two leaders in particular, the growth of the College throughout its long, distinguished history, has been made possible by the contributions and support of many people.

As Mary Baldwin College moves into the decade of the 1990s and beyond, this support becomes increasingly important, because the College must build a substantial endowment. Endowment is the College's margin of excellence, enabling it to strengthen existing programs and to develop new ones.

Endowment is also vital for the heart of the College, our faculty. It is, after all, the faculty who provide, through their teaching and scholarly activity, one of the finest academic programs in this country. Endowment enables the College to provide academic chairs, lectureships, sabbatical leaves, and scholarly travel. A substantial endowment will also allow us to keep faculty salaries competitive and high enough to attract and retain distinguished scholars.

In 1985, the endowment of Mary Baldwin College stood at $11.5 million, placing the College woefully behind some of it nearest competitors. Since June of 1985, those who support the College have increased the fund by $8,051,302 — 69.5 percent.

Thus, the endowment has reached $19.6 million, not including pledges for future commitments, a good foundation for this most important of all the College's building projects. The work must continue, however, so that Mary Baldwin can maintain its momentum and retain its vitality and ability to respond to the changing needs of society.

In the past, we have compared our endowment to that of similar institutions, and we have found ourselves lacking. Now, as we look to the future, we must look at how far we have come in the past six years, and from this success, draw inspiration to sustain the momentum for growth and change.

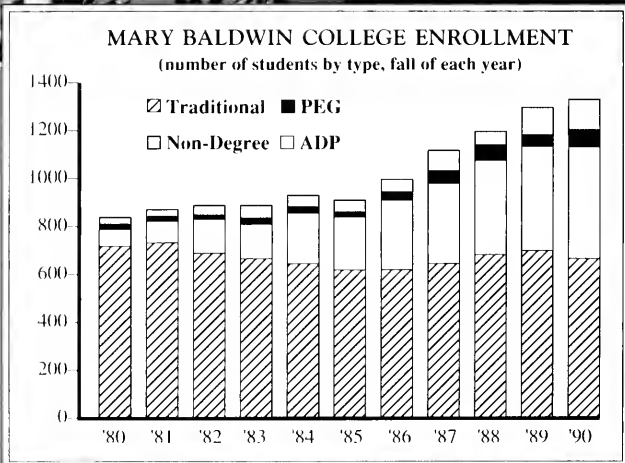

The success of the past five years has shown us that we can build an endowment for this College. Lacking are we? I think not, for the commitment and dedication of those who are supporting Mary Baldwin College are without equal.

Charles S. Luck III is chairman of the Board of Trustees of Mary Baldwin College. His daughter, Cynthia Luck Haw, graduated from Mary Baldwin in 1979.

Keeping enrollment up when the population of available students is going down is an enormous challenge. Mary Baldwin is winning, however, thanks to a dedicated admissions staff and volunteers who share the good news of Mary Baldwin College with prospective students. Student recruitment is enhanced by the efforts of admissions volunteers - faculty, staff, students, and, especially, alumnae and parents of current and former students. They have personal insight into life and learning at this remarkable college and can identify students who will benefit most from the Mary Baldwin experience.
